Few People Have Eyes Alike.
Fully nine-tenths of those who wear Glasses have different vision in each eye. Sometimes it is a decided difference, in others only a slight variation. A careless examination will fail to bring out this defect—the same lenses would be adjusted to each eye—and headaches and eye strain that medicine fails to relieve is the result. I test each eye separately, select proper lenses, adjust glasses to suit both eyes from as complete a Test Case as is made.
No extra charge for testing the eyes. Gold Spectacles, $3.00 to $5.00. If you have any trouble with your eyes or head call and see if I can't relieve you.

TRIPPING FESTIVITIES.
ANOTHER BRILLIANT EVENT.
Masonic Hall, East Weymouth, the Scene of Beauty.

Masonic building, East Weymouth, was the scene of another most charming party last Friday night. The managers of the which has on former occasions given successful parties was again in charge and made the occasion even more brilliant than its predecessors.

The hall was tastefully decorated with bunting, palms, cut flowers and potted plants.

The ushers and floor directors were T. J.
Evans, H. R. Drinkwater, Lyman A.
Bowker, Edwin M. Thayer, John Hollis,
Gordon M. Keating, Frank P. Walker, J.
G. Sherman and Frank D. Tirrell.

Mrs. Arthur M. Raymond, dressed in satin striped tulle trimmed with ribbon
and white lace, and wearing a crown, in black silk skirt, carried a bouquet of roses; Miss Hattie S. Ripley, yellow satin with lace and pearl trimmings;
Miss Ada B. Tirrell, white Swiss muslin with lace trimmings; Miss Edith Tirrell,
yellow India silk with pearl trimmings; Eleanor R. Clapp, pink silk with overdress of white muslin; Nellie B. Tirrell, pink silk with lace trimmings.

All parts of Weymouth, Quincy, Braintree and Hingham were well represented in the gathering and all pronounced the entire affair one to be remembered with pleasure.

Following is a partial list of those who graced the occasion.

EASTERTIDE
There is no death, the lilies say.
We hide our tiny souls away
When hoary Winter comes to blight
Our tender leaves and blossoms bright.
But when the Southland's gentle breath
Comes softly back to banish death,
Beneath the trembling mould we cry:
Hail, resurrection! None shall die.
Sweet prophets of the life to be,
I know this self-same spark in me,
That neither time nor distance knows
And yet is comrade with the rose.
Dear Mother Earth, within thy breast
This better part of me shall rest
No longer than the seeds that bide
The coming of the Eastertide.
CHARLES EUGENE BANKS.

Resurrection.
BY ERNEST MCGAFFEY.
The moonbeams touched the cedars tall
That stood by Jesus' tomb.
All faintly, as the candles waned
That light a spacious room.
While here and there a lonely star
Looked earthward through the gloom.
A hush was on the darkened land,
A calm lay on the sea,
And with the meaning vague
Of miracles to be.
And loosed from midnight's falling grasp
The wandering winds went free.
And when the rock-bound sepulchre
In darkness stood alone,
With trace of moon and waning star
Across its outline thrown,
Nor door was open, but in its stead
A rough-hewn, mighty stone.

But when the dawn-burst filled the skies
And night was changed to day,
A faint of mystic wings was seen
Within the morning gray.
The angel messenger who came—
And rolled the stone away.

AN EASTER MISSION.
BY J. F. HENDERSON.
T WAS the night
before Easter.
A bevy of young
and middle-aged women, a few of the men accompanied by male ex-corts, were busy
ing themselves
about the altar of St. Mark's church, preparing for the portion of the sanctuary
into a garden of flowers, palms and growing plants. Sid Vinner, the popular young lawyer of Stillville, stood in the shadows apart from the group, seriously pulling his mustache and looking somewhat out of sorts. He started and straightened up as a man and a woman entered the church and came down one of the dimly-lighted aisles. The lady—a tall, beautiful girl, with a reed-like grace of movement—was in advance. As she passed close to Sid she recognized him and stopped.
"Oh, Mr. Vinner, isn't it a shame?"
she broke out, in a charmingly impu-lсив way. "The Easter lilies ordered from the city did not come. I am so disappointed, and mortified, too, for all the other ladies have furnished something for the church decorations, and I promised the lilies, you know, and now I can do nothing at all. Mr. Macgregor has been searching the town for flowers, but can find none. Dear! dear! if one of you gentlemen could get some lilies, I should be so glad—some here—I would—well, I'd be eternally grateful." This half-laughing, half-despairing outburst was addressed both to Sid and her stylishly-dressed escort, who had stopped just behind her, but it seemed to the lawyer that the appeal was specially directed to him. His heart was thumping like a trip-hammer, but he spoke quite calmly:
"I shall be glad to try even your gratitude, Miss Lloyd. I will get the lilies for you."
"Oh, will you truly? Can you?"
"I can and will."
"You need not trouble yourself, sir," spoke up the other man, in a voice as cold and cutting as steel. "If Miss Lloyd wants Easter lilies I will get them for her—provided they are to be had."
The significance of the tone and words was not to be mistaken. There was a moment of profound silence;
then Sid Vinner, with admirable self-control, said:
"I have given my word, Miss Lloyd. My offer has no provision attached to it." He smiled audaciously in the flushed, scowling face of Bruce Macgregor; then bowed easily to Helen Lloyd, as she added: "The lilies will be here in good season, I promise you.
Put to fulfill my mission, I must be off at once. Good night." He strode down the aisle to the church door and was gone.
Just as the town clock struck nine Sid Vinner, seated in a plush-honey behind a quick-stepping horse, went spinning out of Stillville along the road leading eastward. "Fifteen miles to Princeton," he mused, with a grim smile. "A drive of 20 miles tomorrow I sleep. But I cannot to-morrow. I must have a lot of Easter lilies for my place, and I cannot have them at all hazards. Wonder if Bruce Macgregor will dare to follow me. I saw him watching me as I drove out of the city."
Sid, it need scarcely be said, was over head and ears in love with Helen Lloyd. His suit had seemed to progress favorably enough until Bruce Macgregor appeared on the scene.
Then there was a change. Macgregor

GOOD NEWS FOR WOMEN

A Discovery Which Cannot Be Estimated in Dollars and Cents.

To women who are not well, and tired of the endless waiting taking of drugs, Dr. Squire's New York Balm is a discovery that has just issued a most interesting little book fully explaining how they can treat and cure themselves at home by electricity. The treatment is so common-sense that it does not require a doctor, and every woman suffering from female weakness, rheumatism, lumbago, back or stomach complaints, etc., does herself an injustice by not investigating it. The book holds out no false inducements, but gives a clear and plain explanation of every State which has been cured after all other treatments failed. It is free by mail, upon application Address DR. SQUIRE, 800 Broadway, New York City. ESTABLISHED 20 YEARS.

plantation to Squire Wymple, leaving the note on the shelf from which he took the flowers. A few minutes later he was hurrying toward his buggy, carrying four pots of Easter lilies. As he approached the road he was watched to see two vehicles instead of one. In the second one sat a man, who called out to Sid:

"Is this Mr. Venger?"

"Yes, Mr. Venger," replied Sid, as he stepped into his buggy and took up the reins.

"What have you there?" asked Macgregor, with an attempt to appear unconcerned.

"The Easter lilies I promised to get for Miss Lloyd," replied Sid, as he stepped into his buggy and took up the reins.

"Hardly,"

"I suppose I can get some where you get them?"

"You'll have to ask the dog. The people who live here are not at home, but the dog and I are old friends. Good-night, Mr. Macgregor."

He wheeled his horse round in the road and sent him dashing away at his best speed toward Stillville.

Long before church time the next morning Sid called with a carriage for Helen Lloyd. He had the lilies, and he took her to the church to dispose of them as she saw fit. "I had to commit burglary to get them," he told her, "but I could do even that for you, Miss Lloyd."

After that it was easy to reach an understanding. They were evenly alone in the church, and the nodding pangs and graceful Easter lilies were directly affected by the little scene that was enacted in their presence.

"And to think you were jealous of Mr. Macgregor!" pointed Helen, after it was all settled. "Foolish man!"

And when the Easter anthem was sung by the choir that morning Miss Lloyd's friends remarked the unusual power and feeling with which she rendered those passages expressive of great joy and exultation.

A few days later Sid Venger received a letter from Squire Wymple, in the course of which the squire wrote: "You are welcome to the flowers, of course, but who is Mr. Bruce Macgregor?"

A gentleman of that name hunted me up Sunday morning and wanted me to issue a warrant for the arrest of Sidney Venger for robbing a greenhouse. Think of that! I had to tell him that I was the victim, and you a privileged character."

GLADNESS AFTER SADNESS.

After the winter, the spring; after the snow, the sun and flowers; after the sadness, the gladness; after the burial, the resurrection; after the visit to the tomb, the return to announce the resurrection. He is arisen. Behold the place where the Lord lay!"

The earth is growing green. The gardens are yellow and purple and white with the crocuses and hyacinths and snowdrops. The woods are sweet with arbutus, the meadows are starred with cowslips, the rocks are white with bloodroot and saxifrage, the copses are purple with anemones, and the liverworts and the spring beauties are in bloom. The magnolia and the forsythia and the Judas tree, with their wide-awake flowers, beckoning the robins and bluebirds have come home again, and the swallows are whirring on their way. It is sweet to live, for it is the season of the resurrection and the life.

"The resurrection and the life." Those are the words of nature and its Lord. The Lenten sorrow is over. The Lenten torpor ends. Let us arise, let us arise, let us be glad, let us be strong that we may work! Christ's blood no longer. Resurrection and life are the words of activity, and words of joy in activity. What a work is there all waiting for the Christian and the man!—N. Y. Independent.

EASTERN CHRISTIAN.

Easter day, as commemorating the chief festival of our religion, is the chief festival of the Christian year, and has been from the earliest times observed with state and ceremony. The manner of celebration must, of course, differ from that of the early Christians, but the spiritual meaning is the same. We find no trace of the observance of Easter, as a Christian festival, in the New Testament. The earliest Christians were so absorbed in events that the sanctity of special times or places was not thought of by them. Says St. Chrysostom: "The whole of time is a festival with Christians because of the excellency of the good things which have been given;" and the ecclesiastical historian Sozomenus writes that "the apostles had no thought of appointing festival days, but of promoting a life of blamelessness and piety."

The human instinct, however, which craves the commemoration of marked epochs in personal, social, ecclesiastical or national life, soon made itself manifest, and found satisfaction in the public celebration of an event which was the foundation of the Christian faith.

As we accept the time appointed, and hail with gladness the beautiful Easter-tide, let us spare a grateful thought to those who labored so earnestly, not only to preserve for us this sacred festival, but also to bring about uniformity in the time of its celebration.—N. Y. Advertiser.

WEYMO

THIRTY

The Progress of Weymouth Gazette's Existence of the Gazette.

The first number of the Weymouth Gazette was issued in the spring of 1867. This present number is published and this article is written in commemoration of the paper's thirtieth birthday.

The Gazette, which was the first Weymouth newspaper, owed its inception and origin to Mr. Charles G. Easterbrook, a young, practical printer, with some previous newspaper experience in Abington.

Bridgewater and elsewhere. He first located in Dr. Nye's building in the rooms now devoted to Mr. F. L. King's undertaking business. His equipment consisted of a meagre stock of type, an old Washington hand press and one old-fashioned job press. The first issue of the paper, which lies before us as we write, was a 7-column folio 23x35 inches, a little more than half its present size. The heading read, "The Weymouth Weekly Gazette, a Family Newspaper Devoted to Local Interests and General News." It was published for some time Thursday mornings. The paper was then set in "Long Primer, leaded," a type several sizes larger than that now in use.

Mr. Easterbrook's salutary was as follows:

The Weymouth Gazette, the first number of which we present to our patrons today, is, as its title purports, a paper to be devoted to the local interests of the town. In the opinion of prominent citizens, there is a fair field in Weymouth for such an enterprise, and the encouragement offered has induced us to commence a weekly issue, in the hope that the business will be one of a permanent character. A press in a town of sufficient importance to sustain it is advantageous in many respects, as it affords a medium of communication in public matters which cannot be so readily attained by any other method, and, as a record of passing events of a local nature, it will be found worthy of preservation for the future, while it is of interest in the present.

The Gazette will assume no sectarian or party position, but its columns will be open for discussion and criticism concerning the various topics of public interest which may arise. In this department we shall endeavor to present such views as are consistent with a regard for the well-fare and progress of the community, for the furtherance of which able writers will contribute to our columns. In local matters arrangements are being made to present a record of news from the different villages of the town, which will be found of general interest and furnish a complete summary of local events in Weymouth, in addition to weekly correspondence from Braintree and other places.

With this brief introduction, the publisher submits the opening number of the new enterprise to his patrons, trusting that its merits may commend it to every family and that our weekly intercourse with the public may prove of value and interest to all.

The first number contained a goodly showing of local advertisements. The following firms, some of them still in business, had announcements therein:

S. W. Pratt, Tinmith,	Weymouth.
J. M. Lufkin, Dining Room, E.	"
E. Rosenfeld, Dry Goods,	"
Mrs. E. A. Richardson, millinery, East	Weymouth.

Fully nine-tenths of those who wear Glasses have different vision in each eye. Sometimes it is a decided difference, in others only a slight variation. A careful examination will fail to bring out this defect—the same lenses would be adjusted to each eye—and headaches and eye strain that medicine fails to relieve is the result. I test each eye separately, select proper lenses, adjust glasses to suit both eyes from as complete a Test Case as is made.

AFTER THE BLOOMING.

Oh, little rosebud with petals red,

As you nod by the garden wall

And breathe drink your petals will fall?

Some day your fragrance will all be gone.

Your sweetness a thing of the past?

Oh, matters not how Much prized you are now,

Little rosebud cannot always last.

And, oh, little maiden, with eyes so blue,

As you sing, and laugh, and are gay,

Does it come to you

That some day too,

Your roses will pass away?

But the little rosebud nods on by the wall

Unheeding the song and me,

And the blue-eyed girl

Swings in the mad wind.

Oh, wise little rosebud and wise little girl,

Why turn to the dark eye and smile?

No od and laugh on

Full your cheeks are gone.

Live to-day! For the morrow—trust!

THE STORY OF AN L. D. B.

"Well, old man," said an unfamiliar voice, as I was waiting for my train at Liverpool street, "you're not a day older.

Going home to tea in the same old,

steady fashion? What don't you know where?"

With puzzled eyes I turned and stared at a big, bronzed bearded man whom I had never seen before. He was looking at me with a keen, penetrating gaze, and his eyes seemed to pierce my very soul.

"You're not a day older," he said, "and yet you look like a man who has been
